

Enjoy safe cruising in the Upper Severn Estuary

The unique characteristics of the upper estuary offer interesting and sometimes challenging opportunities for navigation by recreational craft, whether under sail or power.

Popular destinations include the ports of Lydney and Sharpness (for access to Gloucester) and the facilities offered by sailing clubs at Oldbury and Lydney.

As summer approaches we would like to take this opportunity to remind visitors to the area of some simple points which should help to make your visit memorable – for all the right reasons!

Passage Planning

Though most harbour users are competent and navigate responsibly, some recreational boaters get into trouble because they have not planned adequately with reference to up-to-date official charts of the area, do not understand the significance of the aids to navigation and have failed to appreciate the effects of tide, tide levels and the clearance over the natural features which exist beyond the marked navigable channel.

The Gloucester Harbour Trustees and the Environment Agency provide a great deal of safety information which may be accessed on their respective websites:

<https://www.gov.uk/guidance/lydney-harbour-information-for-boaters>

Be aware that local cruising guides may not always contain the correct or up-to-date information and reference to the relevant, current nautical publications is essential to inform your passage plan.

The Admiralty Chart for the upper estuary between Avonmouth and Hock Cliff is 1166, a new edition of which was issued in December 2015.

In all cases remember that large commercial vessels may be encountered and should be given a wide berth (COLREGS Rule 9).
